I work with sensors, microcontrollers and transducers, embedding them in knitted and stitched textiles so that the fabric itself can listen and sound.

Trained by a decade of listening for theatre and by the slow hand-work of lace and knitting, I make environments where sound is not added to material but drawn out of it.

A wearable sound work: the costume registers the body's smallest tremors and makes them audible.

A performance with Mirthe Dokter wearing the costume was presented at the opening of the Cracking exhibition on April 16,
